
Workplace Relations Updates 2018 - Union Rights of Entry

A fourth workshop has been added to the three sessions already being offered.

A major ongoing expense for Councils is staff and the management of those staff, as an essential part of ensuring Council operations run smoothly.

KelleyJones Lawyers presents, as a result of demand, a further workshop in the series of informative, interactive workshops for council CEO's, Directors (or equivalent) and HR Managers. These workshops explore the changes in the workplace relations area, with this latest session focusing on Union rights of entry into the workplace.

This session is equally relevant to Council CEO's, Directors, Managers, Team Leaders and HR Managers.

Seminar Information

The first three sessions in this Workplace Relations Update have focused on

- the new jurisdiction of the South Australian Employment Tribunal,
- steps for safely navigating termination of employment, and
- dealing with performance management in a way to achieve the best outcomes for both staff and the Council.

By popular request, a fourth session is being added, providing updated training and informative discussion on rights of entry for Union officials under the Fair Work Act 1994 and the Work Health and Safety Act 2012.

Many Team Leaders, Managers and Directors simply have no idea, when faced with a challenging Union official at the workplace, whether they are required to allow them access, or when they can refuse entry.

As with our earlier sessions, as part of each workshop, a detailed paper will be provided, setting out the basis of the law relating to the area of discussion.

A major part of each session is an interactive workshop, in which one or more workplace scenarios are explored and the issues identified and explained. The workshop is facilitated by Chris Morey, a senior and experienced workplace relations lawyer.

The workshops focus on a realistic case study or studies, based within a council employment situation. Each participant is encouraged to be involved and to contribute, with guidance and recommendations from the facilitators.
